

Cut the situation squares below out,
for use in your exercises.

Your parents and friends are pressuring you to play hockey, but you would really rather take figure-skating lessons instead (or vice-versa).	In the school play, you are cast as a fairy but you really wanted to play the ogre (or vice-versa).	Imagine that you have a special talent for singing when you speak – in fact, you can't speak without singing! It's your first day at a new school and your new classmates have never seen anything like it, and begin to make fun of you for it.
A kid posts a video online of himself (or herself) dancing enthusiastically to his favourite song. It quickly goes "viral" at school and his classmates start making fun of him.	Two twins have always been encouraged by their parents to wear matching outfits. Now that they're entering grade 4, one of the twins wants to create their own style, but the other still wants to match.	Your friend told you they really want to try out for the talent show, but at the last minute your friend decides they don't want to audition because they don't think they're good enough.
Your little sister (or brother) can be a real pain. She annoys you by following you around and demanding a turn in everything you do. Whenever you go to a friend's house, your parents insist that you take her with you. You feel like your friends don't want you to come over as much anymore because of it.	You and your best friend have always played soccer together on recreational teams. You both try out for the school's soccer team. You make it and your friend doesn't. At first your friend says they don't care, but you soon realize that they do. Your friend doesn't want to spend as much time together as you used to, and, of course, you have daily practices and games that your friend isn't able to attend.	Create your own conflict